Other documents have indicated that the NSA can monitor email and traditional phone communications. Schneier said the report is credible and probably indicates other SIM card makers were hacked as well. "Do we think this is the only company? Odds are low," he said. David Perry, threat strategist at the security firm F Secure, called the revelations "the biggest story on mobile privacy we've seen so far." The report is troubling, Perry said, because of the methods described. "Intelligence services are hacking all the time," he cheap cycle jerseys said. "What concerns me is that they would go into a factory and spoil the security at the point of origination." The NSA did not immediately respond to requests for comment. Gemalto said in a statement that it takes the matter "very seriously and will devote all resources necessary to fully investigate" the allegations. It added that the intended target was "not Gemalto, per se it was an attempt to try and cast the widest net possible to reach as many mobile phones as possible." Yet the report leaves many questions unanswered, and some experts were cautious about jumping to conclusions about the documents. "One of the reasons I'm skeptical is that different governments have been using other methods to grab communications cycle jerseys cheap and wireless data which are unsecured to begin with," said Darren Hayes, director of cyber security at Pace University's School of Computer Science and Information Systems. "I'm not sure that the US or UK governments would use hackers in the same way that the Chinese or Russians are doing." Schneier said more information is needed to know exactly what the encryption keys would provide, but says it is likely that they would allow access to the phone communications rather than the data transfer, so SMS or voice messages might be accessed but not Skype or other Internet based services. "I think the company should do what Sony did (after being hacked) hire a forensics team," Schneier said. "We need details on how this was done and what can be done to remedy it." Greg Nojeim, a lawyer for the Center for Democracy Technology, a digital rights organisation, said the revelation suggests privacy of people around the best chinese nfl jerseys world is at risk. "Almost everyone in the world carries cell phones and this is an unprecedented mass attack on the privacy of citizens worldwide," Nojeim said. "While there is certainly value in targeted surveillance of cell phone communications, this coordinated subversion of the trusted technical security infrastructure of cell phones means the US and British governments now have easy access to our mobile communications." John Pirc, co founder of the Virginia based security firm Bricata, said the report is "plausible" and, if true, could undermine confidence in mobile communications..
